Flavio Argirò, «Il deposito nella Collatio» (p. 435-437)

Review article of Francesco Maria Lucrezi, Il deposito in diritto ebraico e romano. Studi sulla Collatio VIII (Torino, Giappichelli, 2017) p. viii, 93. – The volume of Francesco Lucrezi regards the Collatio legum divinarum et romanarum, specifically chapter X. It is dedicated to the institut of deposit. The research analyses the roman and hebraic sources cited herein and has generally a criminal content. The study suggests some links between the dating and the scope of this mysterious work.

Parole chiave: Collatio, deposit, furtum.
Collatio, deposito, furtum.

Luigi Antonello Armando, «Machiavelli e il mito degli Etruschi» (p. 439-456)

The a. formulates the hypothesis that the ancient Italic valour invoked in the last chapter of The Prince isn't that of the Romans, but of the Etruscans. He bears out this hypothesis through the reading of the first five chapters of the second part of The Discourses and highlights its consequences with respect to the interpretation of Machiavelli's thought and to the recognition of its actuality.

Parole chiave: Italic valour, Romans-Etruscans, equality, beginning of the world, end of the world.

Marco Auciello, «Da Nicosia a Nicosia. Questioni vecchie e nuove sulle dittature cd. imminuto iure» (p. 51-68)

Review article of Stefania Fusco, 'Oriens de nocte silentio': alcune riflessioni sulla dittatura 'imminuto iure', (Ortacesus, Sandhi, 2018) p. 173. – The a. discusses the recent monograph by Stefania Fusco, focusing on the proposed revaluation of the hypothesis advanced by Giovanni Nicosia in a famous paper – published in 1987 – about the (in)existence of a separate category represented by the so-called dictatores imminuto iure.

Raffaele Basile, «Res communes omnium. Disciplina giuridica e profili (a-)sistematici» (p. 307-322)

Review article of Domenico Dursi, Res communes omnium. Dalle necessità economiche alla disciplina giuridica, «Pubblicazioni del Dipartimento di Scienze Giuridiche. Università degli Studi di Roma ‘La Sapienza’», 113» (Napoli, Jovene, 2017) p. xvi, 153. – The essay retraces analytically the reconstructive iter of the monograph and proposes a critical reading that privileges the two essential aims pursued by the a. The first is to prove how the ‘official’ isolation of the res communes omnium performed by Marcian (D. 1.8.2 pr.-1) may be considered as a development of a line of thought begun by Celsus and completed by Ulpian. The second is to identify an economic ratio – aimed at satisfying the enjoyment of natural resources – preceding the process of classification.

Pierangelo Buongiorno, «Precianus. Davvero un giurista?» (p. 265-276)

The paper aims to investigate the historicity and possible identity of the Precianus iureconsultus mentioned in Cic. fam. 7.8.2, also in connection with the hereditas Preciana mentioned in other letters of Cicero. The a. concludes that no jurist named Precianus has existed but that Precianus was an adjective used by Cicero to conceal the identity of a character that remains unknown at present.

Luigi Capogrossi Colognesi, «Questioni decemvirali e tradizioni sulle XII Tavole» (p. 235-248)

Review article of Donatella Monteverdi, La questione decemvirale. Itinerari e risultati di una complessa vicenda storiografica, «Università degli Studi Magna Graecia di Catanzaro. Collana del Dipartimento di Giurisprudenza, Economia e Sociologia, 54» (Milano, Wolters Kluwer-Cedam, 2019) p. xxviii, 526. – In this paper the a. proposes the review of D. Monteverdi's new book. In particular the a. discusses the first two parts of the book in which Monteverdi is giving us a very comprehensive ed analytic history of the early developments of the researches of the XV and XVI century scholars. Their principal aim was the reconstruction of the original text of the XII Tables, but, in their developments, they had to examine many othewr problems: first of all the social and political struggles which have been at the origin of this legislation. In the last part of the paper the a. discusses in particular the part of the book concerning the great developments of these studies in XVIII century, with Gravina and Vico, and during the historicist Renaissance of German scholarship of XIX century.

Loredana Cappelletti «Postille istituzionali al decreto SEG. 59, 1100 da Alesa, Sicilia» (p. 249-264)

The bronze decree in honor of Nemenios Daphnis from the ancient city Alesa (Tusa, prov. Messina) was issued, in the first half of the 1st cent. BC, by alia and boula of a koinon of priests of Apollo, with the approval of 825 voters. According to the a. the koinon could be identified with an association of priests and devotees of Apollo belonging to several Sicilian communities close together; the sanctuary of Apollo in Alesa may have been the main seat of the koinon, the place of its plenary meetings and of administrative activities. The document demonstrates above all the political-institutional autonomy of the koinon towards the civic bodies (synkletos, senatus, alia?) of Alesa and constitutes another case of survival and continuity of local institutions within the framework of the Roman province of Sicily.

Parole chiave: Greek institutions, provincia Sicilia, religious associations.

Piero Antonio Carnemolla, «Giorgio La Pira romanista: il periodo giovanile (1922-1938)» (p. 467-478)

The a. wonders why La Pira undertook legal studies. The essay analyses La Pira's studies and research during his years of university education and his very first times of teaching, in the context of his deep Christian faith. Special emphasis has been dedicated to the first paper of La Pira (Il Principio di Autorità), as well as to the famous inaugural address titled La genesi del sistema nella giurisprudenza romana I. Problemi generali and finally to La Pira's 1938 monograph on Sextus Pedius. The article describes the profile of this Roman jurist as an autobiographical reference that enlightens the approach of Pira with respect to questions of Roman law and to theological questions.

Parole chiave: La Pira, Sextus Pedius, Roman juridical system, educational function of Roman law.

Consuelo Carrasco García, «'Public trust'/'Commons': ¿'Palingenesias' de una categoría jurídica romana?» (p. 283-306)

On the occasion of the participation at the LXXIII Session de la Société Internationale Fernand De Visscher pour l'Histoire des Droits de l'Antiquité (Edinburg 2019), the a. analyzes the legal category of res communes omnium: in which measure it existed in Roman law, which goods were included therein, and which were the characteristics by which they could be distinguished from public goods. From there the a. takes a tour along different moments in legal history in which this category has been used for the most diverse purposes: a. Baldus de Ubaldis. Res communes omnium and independence of Venice (14th century); b. Vitoria, Vázquez de Menchaca and Grotius. Res communes omnium and freedom of the seas (16th and 17th centuries); c. Martin versus Waddell. Res communes omnium and «Public trust doctrine» (19th); d. Atmosphere, radio space and extra-atmospheric space (20th century).

Raffaele D'Alessio, «Cinque lettere e quattro telegrammi di La Pira: ‘diritto romano vivente’» (p. 457-466)

Review article of Diritto romano vivente. «Caro Catalano ...» 1967-1975. Cinque lettere e quattro telegrammi di Giorgio La Pira, a cura di Rosa Anna Assunta Alabiso, Lavinia Rosa (Firenze, Fondazione Giorgio La Pira, 2017) p. xix, 19. – A review article on the correspondence between Giorgio La Pira and Pierangelo Catalano during the years 1967-1975, collected and preserved by Rosanna Alabiso. The a. focuses on the research perspective advanced in some letters and telegrams sent by La Pira to Catalano, in addition to the text of a speech made by La Pira at the meeting of the Associazione di Studi Sociali Latinoamericani in Rome, on 28-30 November 1974. The paper analyses the conception of ‘living Roman law’ in the context of the dialogue between La Pira and Catalano concerning the ‘negative power’ and the providential plan of ‘grace’ and ‘civilization’.

Parole chiave: La Pira, ‘living Roman law’, providential view of history.

Francesco Fasolino, «L'evasione dalla custodia preventiva a Roma» (p. 157-202)

In the Roman legal system, any attempt to escape from preventive custody or other precautionary measures was severely repressed, regardless of the possible innocence of the accused, as is the case today in Italy and in many other European countries. In a context of general indeterminacy of the border between coercitio and iurisdictio, in which often neither the criminal cases nor the related penalties were strictly defined, the jurists played a role tended to be limited to the reorganization of an elusive and chaotic matter, seeking, as far as possible, to limit the arbitrariness that was recorded in the practice of the courts, also through the use of interpretative rationes based on the criteria of humanitas and benignitas. This led to a real gradation of the penalties applied to the escaped prisoner and his custodians, in evident correlation with the analogous and wider process found in the context of cognitio extra ordinem, which led to the creation of a graduated system of penalties in which specific weight was attributed to the concrete circumstances of the crime. In order to resolve concrete problems, therefore, jurisprudence exercised a function of orientation towards the judges and imperial officials, mediating between the practices followed in the various areas of the empire and the general principles and imperial legislation: with specific reference to the discipline of evasion, the jurists contributed to outline a system more articulated, in which the escape from prison was punished with the severity required by the concrete methods of escape and because of the actual degree of guilt of the fugitives and their guardians.

Parole chiave: Escape from prison, Roman jurists, cognitio extra ordinem. Evasione, giurisprudenza romana, cognitio extra ordinem.

Alberto Filippi, «La reforma intelectual y moral de Brasil: derechos y hegemonía política» (p. 501-522)

Questo discorso, in occasione del decimo anniversario del Seminario Internazionale per i Diritti Umani nell'Università Federale di Paraíba, affronta la complessa crisi politico-istituzionale brasiliana, sin dall'impeachment alla presidentessa Rousseff, al sostanziale ritorno, dopo moltissimi anni, del ceto militare al potere con l'avvento del Capitano paracadutista, Jair Bolsonaro, alla presidenza. Reiterate, molteplici violazioni della Costituzione e dei diritti fondamentali hanno costituito un processo 'destituente' superabile, secondo l'a., facendo ricorso alla metafora che Gramsci aveva mutuato da Renan, soltanto con una profonda 'Riforma intellettuale e morale', capace di generare una cultura politica, una egemonia culturale, in grado di dare vita ad una nuova fase costituente nella lotta per la democrazia antifascista nell'Italia di allora e nel Brasile odierno. Lotta per i diritti umani che risale, nel caso dell'America Latina, al magistero di Bartolomé de las Casas e ai diversi protagonisti della 'tradizione Lascasiana' in difesa della cultura giuridico-politica delle comunità e delle persone maggiormente vulnerabili. Tradizione le cui diverse componenti si può dire che culminano nelle conclusioni del Sinodo per la Amazzonia recentemente indetto da papa Francesco e riguardante le popolazioni dei nove paesi il cui immenso centro è appunto il Brasile: 'Documento finale del Sinodo: esortazione apostolica postsinodale' (febbraio 2020), su temi che sviluppano la lettera enciclica di Francesco, Laudato Sí. Sulla cura della casa comune (2015).

Giovanni Finazzi, «D. 41.2.6.1 (Ulp. 70 ad ed.) e l'occupazione clandestina dei beni immobili incustoditi nella riflessione dei prudentes I» (p. 323-374)

As we learn from D. 41.2.6.1, Labeo thought that, if the possessor of a real estate went to the market and, while he was coming back, the real estate was occupied by another person, the trespasser seemed to possess clandestinely and the one who came back didn't loose the possession until he was rejected. Since the jurist, as we read in D. 41.6.3.5, didn't admit the joint possession, in fact he believed that the trespasser had just the naked possession till he fended off the possessor or maybe also till this later gave up to get back in the real estate. According to other views, the trespasser immediately acquired the possession of the real estate, which at the same time was lost by the previous possessor. Later, established the doctrine of the possession retained by intention, Labeo's opinion about the retention of possession despite the occupation was generalized also for longer occupations. Nevertheless, since it was controversial whether the joint possession was permissible, the nature of the relationship between the trespasser and the real estate was disputed: while some jurists saw it as possession, Paul believed that the trespasser was a naked possessor till the previous possessor lost the possession.

Parole chiave: Clandestine occupation, clandestine possession, detention, real estate.

Roberto Fiori, «Spolia opima e trionfo» (p. 1-50)

The ceremonies of the spolia opima and triumph are closely linked, and share a partially common history. The study of the sources suggests various stages of development: (i) during the first royal age (8th-7th century BC), they were part of the same ceremony, segmented into three stages corresponding to the deities of the pre-Capitoline triad; (ii) in the second royal age (7th-6th century BC), the rise to power of the Etruscan king brought about the unification of the ceremony into the rite of triumphus, and the abandonment of the spolia opima; (iii) during the early republican age (5th-3rd century BC) both the pre-Etruscan forms of the triumph (ovatio) and the spolia opima were recovered – the rules of the latter being reconstructed by the priests in the text called lex Numae; (iv) in the second republican age (3rd-1st century BC), the rules for bestowing the triumph changed, while those relating to the spolia opima probably remained the same, as the ceremony was abandoned until its theoretical recovery by Caesar and Augustus, to which the interpretations of the lex Numae by Varro and (perhaps) Labeo were probably connected.

Patrizia Giunti, «Firenze, 2 febbraio 1934. Perché il diritto romano» (p. 479-496)

Various recent questions concerning the status of current Romanistic discipline, and, in more specific terms, the suitability of teaching Roman law in the context of legal studies, lead the a. to focus on the crisis of ‘lukewarmness’ that La Pira attributed to the historiographic temperament of his time. La Pira used to blame the arid focus on details, which deprived a wider vision of the overall system. The a. investigates the cultural background of La Pira’s perspective and analyses the relationship with the different point of view of Betti.

Parole chiave: La Pira, crisis of ‘lukewarmness’, juridical system, educational function of Roman law.

Ella Hermon, «La culture juridique romaine de gestion résiliente du risque d’inondation» (p. 375-418)

Whereas modern research on the ‘resilience’ component of the concept of flood risk management identifies resilient capabilities without establishing a research methodology, Roman jurists institute a typology of river phenomena by gradually constructing two different scenarios according to the crisis model, which are antagonistic in their consequences for risk management: inundatio-alvei mutatio and from the differentiation of alluvial phenomena in the viewpoint of integrated water management. Land Surveyors (gromatici) reflect the same principles in agri-law by taking anticipatory and forward-looking measures on the perspective of dialogue between decision-makers and stakeholders of the management of real land rights and their water resources (agrarian controversies). The result is a holistic model of resilient flood risk management built by analogy on the elements of land vulnerability to this risk, including involvement of institutional structures and individual and collective initiatives. This framework could structure the examination of ancient experiments attested by ancient sources in order to identify methodological venues in the search for the component ‘resilience’ of the concept of flood risk management, potentially useful for current flood management as well for advancing modern epistemology in the research area related to this risk.

Alessandro Manni, «Sulla persecuzione post mortem dell'apostasia nel Codex Theodosianus» (p. 203-229)

As with crimen maiestatis, apostasy is punished even after death. CTh. 16.7.3 (383 AD) establishes a 5-year term for this post mortem repression, limit cancelled by CTh. 16.7.7 (426 AD), providing the never-ending prosecution of the apostasy. In Codex Iustinianus (C. 1.7.2 and 1.7.4) such term appears reinstated, but only in order to obtain the cancellation of the apostate's last will.

Parole chiave: Apostasy, post mortem criminal prosecution, testamentary capacity.

Salvo Randazzo, «Quaestus omnis patribus indecorus visus. Dagli ‘interessi in conflitto’ al ‘conflitto di interessi’» (p. 86-103)

The research derives from the author’s report to an interdisciplinary conference on conflict of interest. The analysis starts from a general theory perspective to demonstrate the inadequacy of the legal terminology to identify the conflict of interest in a satisfactory manner. Then the a. examines the topic in Roman law, and particularly the possibility of finding these legal objectives in the plebiscitum Claudianum, dating from third century BC. This plebiscitum, erroneously linked to the de repetundis legislation, had the only purpose of prohibiting senators from carrying out maritime trade, an activity considered contrary to the decor of Roman senators. Therefore the a. concludes that the considered provision was completely different from the discipline of conflict of interest as it is considered in modern law.

Parole chiave: Conflict of interest, lex Claudia, senators, leges de repetundis.

Conflitto di interesse, lex Claudia, senatori, leges de repetundis.

Paola Santini, «La vendetta della cicogna» (p. 69-85)

The essay aims to reconstruct the juridical outlines of a strange event related to a candidate defeated in the elections to the praetorship not mentioned by T.R.S. Broughton in his fundamental work. According to Porph. ad Horat. serm. 2.2.50, in the last republican period, when the luxus mensae was used as tool of political promotion, a politician would have introduced the custom of cooking the meat of the stork babies obtaining a loud defeat that became the subject of versus populares.
